

Saged Greens with Lentils

We celebrate a true “power couple” tonight. Heart-healthy, high protein lentils get married to the pride of K Street (vitamin K that is), Swiss Chard. They arrive for this evening’s festivities with an entourage of protein-powered quinoa and widely acclaimed caramelized onions.

It promises to be a most memorable event, presented in good taste.

Let's Prepare, Cook, and Plate This!

Start by Cooking Lentils and Quinoa

Lentils:

Wash lentils and place in a medium saucepan with onion, bay leaf, water, bouillon cube and vinegar. Bring to a boil, reduce heat to medium-low, cover and cook 30 minutes or until lentils are tender. Add more water if needed.

Quinoa:

Bring quinoa and water to boil in a small saucepan. Once water reaches a hard boil, turn off heat, cover and let stand on the cooling burner until ready to serve.

Caramelized Onions

Heat oil in a large deep-sided sauté pan until it begins to shimmer. Add sliced onion and baking soda and toss until onions are well browned. Add wine and toss until wine cooks away. Remove from heat and set aside.

Saged Greens

1. Measure oil, soy sauce, broth, vinegar, garlic and onion, chopped chard stems and chopped sage leaves into a deep, heavy-bottomed saucepan.
2. Bring to a boil. Reduce heat to medium-low and cook 10-minutes.
3. Add chopped chard leaves and toss for 3 minutes. Remove from heat and serve.

Plate the Meal

1. Make a wreath-shaped ring of the quinoa on each plate.
2. Scoop a ladle (3/4 C.) of lentils into the center of the circle.
3. Arrange greens around the circle of quinoa and lentils.
4. Using a fork, separate the caramelized onions and place on top of lentils.
5. Garnish plates with feta cheese.

What I've Learned from this Recipe

Lentils are 25% protein. They're also packed with B vitamins, magnesium, zinc and potassium. These edible seeds from the legume family are loaded with phytochemicals which protect against chronic diseases. Lentils also improve blood sugar levels and protect against vascular damage. They're a terrific staple food for any kitchen. Let us know what you think, and ask any questions you may have! chezdon@plate6.com
